PREFACE

Since the time of initial contacts between the aboriginal population and European explorers, relations between Canada's native people and the Government have been an important factor in the country's history. Today approximately 300,000 Canadian citizens are Indians registered according to the definitions of the Indian Act; many more who do not enjoy this status are of Indian descent. Representatives of these groups and other scholars concerned with this aspect of Canada's culture have initiated a growing number of research projects in the last few years.

Most registered Indians are members of some 574 separate communities or bands. Close to 2,300 reserves have been set aside for these bands; of this number, about 1,600 (over 800,000 acres) are within the Province of British Columbia. Indian lands, including territories formerly designated for Indian use and reserves which are still in existence, are the subjects of much inquiry. While textual records are consulted frequently, other forms of documentation are sometimes overlooked. Maps and plans which form part of the archival record are often a rich source of historical information and studied in conjunction with textual material can provide a more complete picture of this aspect of Canada's past. Indeed, often written documents are unintelligible without the sketches or plans which originally accompanied them.

In 1977, at the Western Studies Conference in Calgary, Alberta, a listing of maps relating to Indian reserves in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta was distributed by the Public Archives of Canada. Response to this listing has been enthusiastic, and therefore plans to prepare more complete cartobibliographies for that region and for the rest of Canada have been finalized. This is the first volume in the series.

This catalogue lists significant cartographic documents within the holdings of the National Map Collection relating to Indian affairs in British Columbia. These include maps which can be used in studies of particular reserves, as well as a selection of more general material relating to Indian matters in Canada.

About half of the items listed form part of the records of the Central Registry System of the Indian Affairs Branch. These maps, many of which had been folded to fit into the files, require special storage conditions if their long-term preservation is to be ensured, and therefore they have been separated from the textual material they accompanied. The files themselves remain in the custody of the Federal Archives Division, Public Archives of Canada (RG 10, Black Series). A finding aid which allows access to the maps and plans according to volume and file numbers is available from the National Map Collection (RG 10M, 78903/45).

Other material listed includes Indian Land Sales maps from the Lands and Membership Division of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (RG 10M, 76703/9); Indian Affairs Survey Records plans (catalogued individually); maps from the Commission Respecting Indian Lands and Indian Affairs Generally in the Province of British Columbia (RG 33M/104, 78903/15); maps from the Indian Claims Commission (RG 33M/115, 78903/43); and maps from other federal government departments and agencies. Finding aids for these groups exist as well, and are available to researchers in the National Map Collection. In addition, relevant material from other levels of government and from private sources has been included in this listing.

Stringent criteria have been applied in the selection of items such as general reference maps on which Indian reserves are shown. Township Plans, Sectional Maps, National Topographic System maps and British Columbia provincial series maps are valuable sources. Due to the extent of these series, however, listing of individual map sheets was not possible.* In cases where a printed series map was used as a base on which pertinent information was added by hand, the map is included in this catalogue. These manuscript features make such items unique historical records.

Architectural material relating to Indian affairs, although a part of the National Map Collection's holdings, has not been listed in this publication.

The authors of this catalogue are indebted to their colieagues in the Public Archives of Canada for their assistance. Particular thanks are extended to William Oppen, formerly of the National Map Collection, and Jean-Pierre Lukowycz of the Federal Archives Division, for initiating this project; to Betty Kidd, Director, National Map Collection, for her support; to Dorothy Ahlgren, Head, Government Cartographical and Architectural Records Section, for her encouragement and valuable assistance; and especially to Mary Jane Blais and Carmen Paul for their many hours of typing.

Users of this listing who wish to communicate comments or corrections, or acquire copies of material listed, are invited to contact the Government Cartographical and Architectural Records Section, National Map Collection, Public Archives of Canada, 395 Wellington Street, Ottawa, Canada KIA 0N3.

INTRODUCTION

Because the land is such an important factor in native life, its disposition has played an important role in relations between the Indian population and the Canadian government. The methods of obtaining lands desired for settlement have varied in different regions of the country according to the policies of the governing bodies of the time. The practice of the French colonial government was to set aside reserves without making treaties for the release of other lands. Britain, however, recognized Indian interest in the land and tried to obtain formal surrenders of territories wanted for development. Under British law, aboriginal title could be extinguished only by formal agreement, and only to the Crown. The Dominion government followed this course in its own dealings with native groups.

The signing of treaties was considered by the Government to be the ideal method of settling land questions with the native population. These agreements usually spelled out surrenders of territory in return for reserve lands and other benefits such as cash grants, annuities, hunting and fishing rights, educational facilities and so on. Although the Government attempted to be consistent in its dealings with Indians, it did not succeed in obtaining formal surrenders in all parts of the country. Even today approximately half of Canada's registered or "status" Indians are not governed by treaty, and only about half of the land mass of the country has been formally ceded by the native people.

In British Columbia, the history of Indian relations with government has been somewhat different from that of Indians in other parts of the country. In the 1850s several treaties were concluded on Vancouver Island by Governor James Douglas, then acting on behalf of the Hudson's Bay Company. Douglas held the British view that the native population had certain territorial rights which had to be formally surrendered before European settlement could proceed. He later met with opposition from the Colonial Secretary, who refused to allocate funds for treaty settlement. Douglas was therefore unable to continue his policy of obtaining surrenders from Indian bands, but he continued to do his utmost to ensure that reserves of sufficient size were set aside.

Governor Douglas's successors were much less generous in settling native land claims, and reduced the size of some of the reserves previously allotted. Later administrations did not recognize the existence of any legal title the Indians might have had, and set aside reserves without dealing with the issue of Indian ownership or surrender of lands. The areas covered by the treaties concluded by Douglas, and a region in the northeast ceded by an adhesion to Treaty No. 8 in 1900, remain today the only parts of British Columbia governed by such agreements.

The British North America Act of 1867 designated "Indians, and Lands reserved for the Indians" as a federal matter. Therefore, when British Columbia joined Confederation in 1871, jurisdiction over Indian affairs passed from the colonial administration to the federal government. Lands which the Province held in trust for Indian bands were to be transferred to the Dominion, but the two authorities did not agree on the size of reserves. The Dominion government sought to allocate eighty acres of land per family of five, to make reserves in the province more equitable with those set aside in other parts of the country. In British Columbia, most bands had been granted several small reserves, the total acreage of which was far less than the area desired by the federal government. The Province argued that these Indians, with a migratory lifestyle, did not need large tracts of land suitable for agricultural pursuits. The provincial authorities were determined to limit reserves in order to allow for the expansion of settlement. Further problems ensued when the British Columbia Crown Lands Act, which failed to recognize any aboriginal interest in public lands, was passed in 1874. This legislation was disallowed by the Dominion government in 1875, and had to be amended before being accepted.

Various Commissions were established to deal with the question of Indian lands, and finally the matter of reserves was settled between the two governments by the Commission Respecting Indian Lands and Indian Affairs Generally in the Province of British Columbia. This body, whose report was completed in 1916, made specific recommendations on the area and boundaries of reserves throughout the province. In 1920, the British Columbia Indian Lands Settlement Act (10-11 Geo. V c. 51) authorized the adjustment of reserve boundaries, including reductions, according to the Commission's recommendations. The Act allowed for "reductions, or cutoffs [from reserves] to be effected without surrenders of the same by the Indians, notwithstanding any provisions of the Indian Act to the contrary. . . ." Federal Orders-in-Council in later years (P.C. 1265, 19 July 1924; P.C. 7282, 16 September 1941) and legislation at the provincial level completed the transfer of Indian lands to the Dominion and ended the dispute between the two governments. British Columbia Indians, however, have not accepted this as a final solution, and continue to press for recognition of their aboriginal rights in unsurrendered land in the province.

Responsibility for Indian affairs has been accorded varying degrees of importance by the Canadian government since 1867, and administrative changes reflect this shift in emphasis. At Confederation, Indian matters were placed under the control of the Department of Secretary of State for the Provinces, the Secretary of State being named the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. In 1873, the Indians and Indian Lands Branch was created within the new Department of the Interior. At that time a Commissioner for Indian Affairs was named for the Province of British Columbia. Two administrative districts called superintendencies (Victoria and Fraser) were established in the province in 1875.

The first Indian Act (39 Vic. c. 18), which established a registry of natives eligible for certain privileges, while at the same time delineating the boundaries of activities allowed to those individuals, was passed in 1876. Eskimos and those taking half-breed scrip were specifically excluded from the provisions of this legislation. In 1880, the Department of Indian Affairs was created to represent the Dominion government in all native matters. In that year the two superintendencies in British Columbia were abolished in preparation for the establishment of six Indian agencies in 1881. In each of these an Indian agent was appointed to act as a liaison between the bands in his charge and the Department, represented by the Commissioner. Over the years, agency boundaries changed frequently, as old ones were combined and new ones created.

The Department of Indian Affairs continued to operate until 1936, when Indian Affairs became a branch of the Department of Mines and Resources. In 1949, the Branch was transferred to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. A revised Indian Act (15 Geo. VI c. 29), came into effect in 1951. In 1965, the Indian Affairs Branch was moved to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Since 1966, Indian affairs have been among the responsibilities of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, also referred to as the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. Today the Department operates through regional and district offices rather than agencies.

Historical evidence of relations between native groups and the Government of Canada is found in the records of every administrative body assigned the responsibility for native affairs. A great many cartographical items have been created by these departments and others in the course of their dealings with native people. These range from printed maps and atlases produced for public distribution to sketches hastily made to accompany letters from individuals to Indian agents. Rough drafts, official surveys and maps made for Royal Commissions are all part of the federal archival record, and all such documents have been included in this listing.

It must be stressed that this catalogue is not definitive. Provincial archives and other institutions hold material valuable for research. Many archival maps relating to Indian affairs remain with other records of federal government departments, either in the departments' current records systems, or with material held by the Public Records Division of the Public Archives of Canada. The transfer of cartographical items of historical value to the National Map Collection will take place over the years, and it is hoped that this listing can be revised periodically to include these new acquisitions.

We trust that this volume will be useful to scholars of native history and to native people seeking a more complete understanding of their heritage.

FORMAT

General Organization

Current provincial and territorial boundaries have been respected in the arrangement of the entries, regardless of what province or district the reserves were in at the time of map production. Maps have been listed by reserve name whenever possible, even when several reserves are shown on one map. Where this was not possible, maps have been listed by agency name. Since agency names and boundaries have changed over the years, researchers are advised to consult entries under other agency names. Entries are arranged alphabetically, then by date.

Reserve Names and Numbers

The authority used for reserve names and numbers is the Schedule of Indian Reserves and Settlements (Ottawa: Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, 1972). For reserves which are not listed in this schedule, such as reserves which no longer exist, schedules published in departmental annual reports have been used as a guide whenever possible. For areas never officially confirmed as Indian reserves, the names which were in use when the maps were created have been used.

Map Titles

Titles have been transcribed as they appear on the maps. Additions to original titles have also been recorded. Punctuation has been changed when necessary. Information which does not appear on the maps is inserted in brackets. Usually information in brackets has been obtained from related documentation.

Dates

Entries are arranged chronologically by date of map production. If the date does not appear on the map, it has been supplied in brackets, thus: [1885]. Dates stamped on the map or dates of related documentation have been used. The date of additions to a map is recorded after the first date. When more than one addition appears, the latest has been used. If the later date appears on the map, it is listed thus: 1885 (1898). If it has been determined from other sources, it is given in brackets, thus: 1885 [1898]. In cases where the date could not be ascertained, the letters "N.D/S.D." (i.e. no date) have been used. Undated entries are placed before dated entries.

Multiple Copies

Duplicates or other versions of a map have been referred to as "copies". Researchers are advised that all copies of a map should be consulted.

Cross-References

Alternate names and alternate spellings of names have been listed with a "Refer to/ Consulter" reference to the name under which entries for that reserve or agency appear. For example, "Haltkam No. 4 - Refer to/Consulter : Sahhaltkum No. 4" indicates that entries for that reserve are found under the name "Sahhaltkum No. 4".

Often, several reserves or agencies are shown on one map. In these cases, the complete title has been listed under one reserve or agency name. Under the names of other reserves or agencies shown, "See/Voir" references are given for the appropriate date. For example "Cloyah No. 5 - 1905 - See/Voir : Tsimpsean No. 2" indicates that a 1905 map listed under Tsimpsean No. 2 also shows Cloyah Reserve No. 5.

PRÉFACE

Depuis l'époque où les premiers contacts se sont établis entre la population aborigène et les explorateurs européens, les relations entre les autochtones du Canada et les gouvernements ont joué un rôle important dans l'histoire du pays. Aujourd'hui, environ 300 000 citoyens canadiens sont des Indiens inscrits conformément aux définitions de la Loi sur les Indiens; des citoyens beaucoup plus nombreux, qui ne jouissent pas de ce statut, sont d'ascendance indienne. Depuis quelques années, des représentants de ces groupes et des spécialistes de cet aspect de la culture canadienne ont mis sur pied un nombre grandissant de projets de recherche.

La plupart des Indiens inscrits sont membres de quelque 574 communautés séparées ou bandes. Près de 2 300 réserves, dont 1 600 (plus de 800 000 acres) en Colombie-Britannique, ont été mises à la disposition de ces bandes. Les terres indiennes, y compris les territoires autrefois réservés à l'usage des Indiens et les réserves encore existantes, font l'objet d'un grand nombre de demandes d'information. On consulte fréquemment les textes, mais parfois on néglige d'autres formes de documentation. Les cartes et les plans conservés dans des archives constituent souvent des sources abondantes d'information historique et, si on les étudie conjointement avec les textes, ils peuvent offrir une image plus complète de cet aspect du passé du Canada. En fait, les documents écrits sont souvent inintelligibles si on ne consulte pas en plus les dessins ou les plans qui les accompagnaient à l'origine.

En 1977, à la Western Studies Conference, à Calgary, en Alberta, les Archives publiques du Canada ont distribué une liste de cartes sur les réserves indiennes du Manitoba, de la Saskatchewan et de l'Alberta. Cette liste a connu un tel succès que, par la suite, on a décidé de préparer des cartobibliographies plus complètes pour cette région et pour le reste du Canada. Voici le premier volume de cette série.

Ce catalogue donne la liste des cartes importantes se rapportant aux affaires indiennes de Colombie-Britannique conservées par la Collection nationale de cartes et plans. On y trouve des cartes destinées à l'étude de certaines réserves en particulier, ainsi qu'un choix de documents d'intérêt plus général touchant les affaires indiennes du Canada.

Environ la moitié des documents énumérés font partie des Archives centrales de la Direction des affaires indiennes. Ces cartes, dont un grand nombre avaient dû être pliées pour être rangées dans les classeurs, exigent des conditions particulières d'entreposage si l'on veut assurer leur conservation à long terme et, par conséquent, elles ont été séparées des documents qui les accompagnaient. Les dossiers eux-mêmes restent confiés aux soins de la Division des archives fédérales, Archives publiques du Canada (RG 10, série noire). À la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, on peut consulter un instrument de recherche qui permet de repérer les cartes et les plans d'après le numéro du volume et le numéro du dossier (RG 10M, 78903/45).

Parmi les autres documents énumérés, citons les cartes relatives aux ventes de terrains indiens qui proviennent de la Direction de la gestion foncière et de l'effectif des bandes du ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord Canadien (RG 10M, 76703/9); des plans Indian Affairs Survey Records (catalogués individuellement); des cartes de la Commission des terres et des affaires indiennes en général dans la province de Colombie-Britannique (RG 33M/104, 78903/15); les cartes de la Commission d'étude des revendications des Indiens (RG 33M/115, 78903/43); et des cartes provenant d'autres ministères et agences du gouvernement fédéral. Des instruments de recherche existent également pour ces groupes et peuvent être demandés par les chercheurs de la Collection nationale de cartes et plans. De plus, dans cette liste, on a inclus des documents importants provenant d'autres niveaux de gouvernement et de sources privées.

Des critères rigoureux nous ont guidés pour établir une sélection des documents comme cela s'est fait dans le cas des cartes générales sur lesquelles figurent les réserves indiennes. Les plans de cantons, les cartes Sectional, les cartes du Système national de référence cartographique et les cartes des séries provinciales de Colombie-Britannique constituent des ressources précieuses. Cependant, à cause de l'ampleur de ces séries, on n'a pu faire une liste de toutes les cartes qui les composent.* Toutefois, lorsqu'une carte de série a été utilisée comme un document de travail auquel on a ajouté à la main des renseignements utiles, ce document apparaît dans le catalogue. Ces indications manuscrites font de ces cartes des documents historiques uniques en leur genre.

Les documents architecturaux relatifs aux affaires indiennes, bien que faisant partie des fonds de la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, ne figurent pas dans cette publication.

Les auteurs de ce catalogue remercient ici leurs collègues des Archives publiques du Canada qui les ont aidés dans leur tâche. Ils remercient spécialement William Oppen, autrefois de la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, et Jean-Pierre Lukowycz, de la Division des archives fédérales, qui sont à l'origine de ce projet; Betty Kidd, directrice de la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, pour son aide; Dorothy Ahlgren, chef de la Section des documents cartographiques et architecturaux du gouvernement, pour ses encouragements et sa précieuse collaboration; et en particulier, ils adressent leurs remerciements à Mary Jane Blais et Carmen Paul pour les nombreuses heures de dactylographie qu'elles ont fournies.

Nous invitons les utilisateurs de cette liste qui souhaitent faire part de leurs commentaires ou suggérer des corrections, ou encore qui désirent acquérir des copies des documents cités, à entrer en relation avec la Section des documents cartographiques et architecturaux du gouvernement, Collection nationale de cartes et plans, Archives publiques du Canada, 395, rue Wellington, Ottawa, Canada, K1A 0N3.

*Les chercheurs peuvent en plus utiliser les instruments de recherche non publiés de la Collection nationale de cartes et plans, et la publication Index de plans des cantons de l'Ouest canadien/Index to Township Plans of the Canadian West (Collection nationale de cartes et plans, Archives publiques du Canada, Ottawa, 1974).

INTRODUCTION

Du fait que la terre constitue un élément primordial de la vie indienne, la façon dont on en a disposé a joué un rôle important dans les relations entre la population indienne et le gouvernement du Canada. Les méthodes pour obtenir les terres qu'on voulait pour la colonisation ont varié selon les différentes régions du pays, conformément aux politiques suivies par les autorités gouvernementales de l'époque. L'usage du gouvernement colonial français était de prendre possession des terres sans conclure de traité, tout en réservant des espaces pour les Indiens. La Grande-Bretagne, de son côté, reconnaissait le droit des Indiens à la terre et essayait d'obtenir l'abandon, dans les règles, des territoires qu'elle souhaitait mettre en valeur. D'après la loi britannique, les droits de propriété des aborigènes ne pouvaient être éteints que par un accord en règle et seulement en faveur de la Couronne. Le gouvernement du Dominion a suivi cette voie dans ses négociations avec les groupes autochtones.

Le gouvernement considérait que la signature de traités était la méthode idéale pour régler avec la population autochtone la question des terres. Ces accords stipulaient habituellement la cession de territoires avec, en contrepartie, l'attribution de terres pour constituer une réserve, accompagnée d'autres avantages comme des subventions en espèces, des rentes annuelles, des droits de chasse et de pêche, des services éducatifs et ainsi de suite. Bien que le gouvernement ait essayé de négocier d'une façon uniforme avec tous les Indiens, il n'a pas réussi à obtenir des cessions en règle partout au pays. Au Canada, même aujourd'hui, environ la moitié des Indiens qui sont inscrits sur les rôles du ministère («Indiens inscrits») ne sont pas gouvernés par traité. En effet, à peu près seulement la moitié du territoire du pays a été cédée formellement par les autochtones.

L'histoire des relations des Indiens de Colombie-Britannique avec le gouvernement a été quelque peu différente de celle des Indiens des autres régions du pays. Dans les années 1850, le gouverneur James Douglas, agissant alors pour le compte de la Compagnie de la baie d'Hudson, a conclu plusieurs traités dans l'île de Vancouver. Douglas partageait le point de vue britannique selon lequel la population autochtone détenait certains droits territoriaux dont il fallait obtenir la cession en règle pour que la colonisation européenne puisse progresser. Par la suite, il se heurta au secrétaire des Colonies qui refusa d'allouer des fonds pour permettre la négociation des traités. Douglas se trouva par conséquent incapable de continuer la politique qu'il suivait afin d'obtenir la cession de terres de la part des bandes indiennes mais il continua à faire tout son possible pour s'assurer que des réserves d'étendue suffisante soient mises de côté.

Les successeurs du gouverneur Douglas se montrèrent bien moins généreux que lui lorsqu'il fallut satisfaire les revendications des autochtones en matière de terres et ils réduisirent les dimensions de certaines des réserves précédemment allouées. Les gouvernements suivants ne reconnurent aux Indiens aucun titre légal de propriété et mirent de côté des réserves sans s'occuper des droits des Indiens ni de la cession des terres. Les régions couvertes par les traités conclus par Douglas et une région du Nord-Est contenue dans le traité n^{o} 8 sont aujourd'hui les seules parties de la Colombie-Britannique gouvernées par de tels accords.

L'Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique de 1867 a décidé que «les Indiens et les terres réservées aux Indiens» relevaient du gouvernement fédéral. Par consé-quent, lorsque la Colombie-Britannique s'est jointe à la Confédération en 1871, la juridiction en matière d'affaires indiennes est passée de l'administration coloniale au gouvernement fédéral. Les terres dont la province avait la garde pour le compte des bandes indiennes ont dû être transférées au Dominion, mais les deux administrations ne sont pas tombées d'accord sur les dimensions des réserves. Le gouvernement du Dominion cherchait à allouer 80 acres de terre par famille de cinq personnes pour que, dans cette province, les réserves aient une superficie plus proche de celles mises de côté dans les autres parties du pays. En Colombie-Britannique, la plupart des bandes avaient reçu plusieurs petites réserves, dont la superficie totale était loin de celle désirée par le gouvernement fédéral. La province prétendait que ses Indiens, avec leur mode de vie nomade, n'avaient pas besoin de vastes terrains destinés à la culture. Les autorités provinciales étaient déterminées à limiter les réserves afin de permettre l'expansion de la colonisation. D'autres difficultés survinrent quand le British Columbia Crown Lands Act, qui ne reconnaissait aucun droit aborigène sur les terres de la Couronne, fut adopté en 1874. Cette loi fut désavouée par le gouvernement du Dominion en 1875, et dut être modifiée avant d'être acceptée.

On établit alors diverses commissions pour traiter du problème des terres indiennes. Finalement, la question des réserves a été réglée entre les deux gouvernements par la Commission des terres et des affaires indiennes en général dans la province de Colombie-Britannique. Cet organisme, dont le rapport a été achevé en 1916, fit des recommandations spéciales sur la surface et les limites des réserves dans toute l'étendue de la province. En 1920, la Loi du règlement relatif aux terres des sauvages de la Colombie-Britannique (10-11 Geo. V, c. 51) a autorisé le rajustement des frontières des réserves, y compris les réductions, conformément aux recommandations de la commission. La loi permettait des « réductions ou retranchements [des réserves] à effectuer sans leur abandon par les sauvages nonobstant toutes dispositions contraires de la Loi des sauvages . . . » Par la suite, des arrêtés en conseil fédéraux (C.P. 1965 du 9 juillet 1924; C.P. 7282 du 16 septembre 1941) et des lois provinciales complétèrent le transfert des terres indiennes au Dominion et mirent fin aux conflits entre les deux gouvernements. Cependant, les Indiens de la Colombie-Britannique n'ont pas accepté cet accord comme solution finale, et continuent de revendiquer la reconnaissance de leurs droits sur les terres non cédées de la province.

L'importance donnée aux affaires indiennes par le gouvernement canadien n'a pas toujours été la même, comme l'indiquent les nombreux changements administratifs survenus depuis 1867. Au moment de la Confédération, les questions indiennes furent placées sous le contrôle du Secrétariat d'État pour les provinces, le secrétaire d'État étant nommé surintendant général pour les affaires indiennes. En 1873, on créa au nouveau ministère de l'Intérieur la Direction des Indiens et des terres indiennes. On nomma alors un Commissaire des affaires indiennes pour la province de Colombie-Britannique. Deux districts administratifs appelés surintendances (Victoria et Fraser) y furent établis en 1875.

Le premier Acte des sauvages (39 Vic., c. 18), qui établissait une liste d'autochtones ayant droit à certains privilèges, tout en définissant les limites des activités permises à ces individus, fut promulgué en 1876. Les Esquimaux et ceux qui acceptaient des certificats de concession pour les Métis furent spécifiquement exclus des dispositions de cette loi. En 1880, le ministère des Affaires indiennes fut créé. Cette année-là, les deux surintendances de Colombie-Britannique furent supprimées pour être remplacées, en 1881, par six agences indiennes. Dans chacune d'elles, un agent indien fut nommé comme agent de liaison entre les bandes dont il avait la charge et le ministère représenté par le commissaire. Au cours des années, les limites des agences ont changé fréquemment par suite de fusions ou de créations de nouvelles agences.

Le ministère des Affaires indiennes continua de fonctionner jusqu'en 1936, date où les affaires indiennes sont devenues une direction du ministère des Mines et Ressources. En 1949, cette direction fut transférée au ministère de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration. Une révision de la Loi sur les Indiens (15 Geo. VI, c. 29) entra en vigueur en 1951. En 1965, la Direction des affaires indiennes fut transférée au ministère du Nord canadien et des Ressources nationales. Depuis 1966, c'est le ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien, appelé aussi ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord, qui a la charge des affaires indiennes. Aujourd'hui le ministère fonctionne grâce à des bureaux régionaux et de districts plutôt que par le truchement d'agences.

On trouve dans les archives de tous les services administratifs chargés des affaires autochtones un témoignage historique des relations entre les groupes autochtones et le gouvernement du Canada. De très nombreux documents cartographiques ont été créés par les ministères que nous avons cités et bien d'autres au cours de leurs tractations avec les autochtones. Ces documents vont de cartes et d'atlas imprimés destinés à la diffusion dans le public à des croquis rapides accompagnant les lettres de particuliers à des agents indiens. On trouve dans les archives fédérales aussi bien des brouillons à peine ébauchés que des plans de levés officiels et des cartes produites pour les commissions royales. Tous ces documents sont inscrits dans ce catalogue.

Il nous faut insister cependant sur le fait que ce catalogue n'est pas définitif. Les archives provinciales et d'autres institutions détiennent des documents précieux pour la recherche. De nombreuses cartes archivistiques relatives aux affaires indiennes se trouvent encore avec d'autres documents des ministères fédéraux, soit dans les services de gestion des documents des ministères, soit dans les documents détenus par la Division des archives fédérales des Archives publiques du Canada. Le transfert de documents cartographiques de valeur historique à la Collection nationale de cartes et plans se fera au cours des années et il faut espérer que l'on pourra réviser périodiquement cette liste pour y inclure les nouvelles acquisitions.

Nous pensons que cet ouvrage sera utile aux chercheurs spécialisés en histoire des autochtones, et aux autochtones qui cherchent à mieux connaître leur patrimoine.

PRÉSENTATION

Organisation générale

Dans la rédaction des notices, on a respecté les frontières provinciales et territoriales actuelles sans tenir compte de la province ou du district où se trouvaient les réserves au moment où la carte a été dressée. Les cartes sont classées par noms de réserves chaque fois que c'est possible même si plusieurs réserves figurent sur la même carte. Lorsque ce n'est pas possible, les cartes ont été classées par noms d'agences. Comme les noms d'agences et les frontières ont changé au cours des années, on conseille aux chercheurs de consulter les notices sous d'autres noms d'agences. Les notices sont disposées par ordre alphabétique, puis chronologique.

Noms et numéros de réserves

On s'est basé sur Schedule of Indian Reserves and Settlements (ministère des Affaires indiennes et du Nord canadien, Ottawa, 1972) pour déterminer les noms et les numéros de réserves. Dans le cas des réserves qui ne figurent pas sur cette liste, comme, par exemple, celles qui n'existent plus, on s'est fondé chaque fois que c'était possible sur les listes publiées dans les rapports annuels du ministère. Pour les régions qui n'ont jamais été officiellement confirmées comme réserves indiennes, on a utilisé les noms en usage au moment où les cartes ont été établies.

Titres des cartes

On a transcrit les titres tels qu'ils apparaissent sur les cartes. On a aussi noté les additions aux titres originaux. On a changé la ponctuation lorsque c'était nécessaire. Les renseignements qui ne figurent pas sur les cartes sont mis entre crochets. Ces renseignements proviennent généralement de documents connexes.

Dates

Exemplaires multiples

Les duplicata ou les versions successives d'une carte ont été désignés comme «exemplaires». Les chercheurs devraient consulter tous les exemplaires d'une carte.

Renvois

Les autres noms et les noms orthographiés d'une façon différente ont été classés avec la référence Refer to/Consulter ajoutée au nom sous lequel les notices pour cette réserve ou cette agence apparaissent. Par exemple, Haltkam n° 4 - Refer to/Consulter : Sahhaltkum n° 4 indique que les notices pour cette réserve se trouvent sous le nom Sahhaltkum n° 4 . Souvent, plusieurs réserves ou plusieurs agences figurent sur une seule carte. En ce cas, le titre complet a été inscrit sous une seule réserve ou un seul nom d'agence. Sous les noms des autres réserves ou des autres agences qui figurent sur la carte, on donne les références See/Voir pour la date appropriée. Par exemple, Cloyah n° 5 - 1905 - See/Voir : Tsimpsean n° 2 indique qu'une carte de 1905 classée sous Tsimpsean n° 2 montre aussi la réserve Cloyah n° 5.

Illustrations

Les notices explicatives dont une illustration se trouve dans le présent ouvrage ont été signalées par un astérisque (*).

Indian Reserve Commission 2004
British Columbia
New Westminster
3rd March 1879

Survey Branch 12,136

Sir,

I am sorry to say that it will be necessary to re-survey the Indian Reserve on Valdez Island (east coast of Vancouver Island), owing to it not having been surveyed by Mr A. H. Green in accordance with the decision of the Commissioners.

The circumstances are as follows.

Captn Walk R.N. is the only white settler upon the island. He has at the north end of it a pre-emption of 160 acres & a Naval Officers grant of 60 [illegible] acres.

The Honorable
The Superintendent Gener
of Indian Affa
